Presenter: Dr. Mandy Buss, University of Manitoba

Biography : Dr. Mandy Buss is Metis from the Red River Settlement in Manitoba and was born and raised in Manitoba. She did her Residency in the Northern Remote Family Medicine program and spent the first 5 years of practice working in First Nations Communities in Northern Manitoba. She currently works as a family physician at Northern Connections Medical Center with the Northern Remote Family medicine program. Her other roles within the University of Manitoba include the Indigenous Health Lead for the Department of Family Medicine and The Director of the Indigenous Health Longitudinal Curriculum for the Undergrad Medical Education department. She also sits on the Executive of the Post Graduated Truth and Reconciliation committee as the co-chair of the Curriculum development and Implementation Working Group.

Dr. Buss is the current President of the Indigenous Physicians Association of Canada, sits on the executive committee for the National Consortium for Indigenous Medical Education, and is on the College of Family Physicians of Canada's Indigenous Health Committee.

Learning objectives:

1. Understand the importance of acknowledging land in our work of Truth and Reconciliation
2. Identify how historical policy towards First Nations, Metis and Inuit have contributed and continue to perpetuate the gaps in all social determinants of health.
3. Critically reflect on Indigenous views of relational accountability.
4. Identify action items that you and/or your institutes can implement to move forward with Truth and Reconciliation work.
